Our Friend the Pirate.
The pirate laughed gleefully as he hoisted the Jolly Roger.
"Ha! ha! ha!" he cackled.
"What's the matter?" we nervously inquired, wondering meanwhile whether he had just hatched some fiendish and diabolical plot regarding our immediate future.
"Ha! ha! ha!" he repeated.
"Mabe he's an Englishman and has just seen the point of a joke that he heard on his last cruise," muttered Jabez. (Jabez would crack Old Nick himself over the pate with a joke.)
"Ha! ha! ha!" the pirate continued. "What is it?" we begged.
"See that Jolly Roger?" inquired the pirate. "That belongs to my mother-in-law. It's (ha! ha!) her petticoat. And she can't come out of her cabin till the cruise is over because it's the only one she has on board." Whereupon we all laughed heartily, although we noticed that our friend the pirate blanched fearfully whenever he chanced to hear the outraged cries of the old lady rising shrilly above the pealing ebullitions of our mirth.

"The Light That Failed."
She—They don't seem happy together. He once told me that his wife was the light of his life.

He—Ah—but the light was always going out. She (catching the idea)—And leaving him entirely in the dark.—Punch.

His Idea Exactly.
Uncle—How do you like your Sunday school teachers?
Tommy—Oh, she's got good sense. She's smarter than Mom is.
Uncle—Indeed? So you believe in her, eh?

Tommy—Sure! Her an' me thinks alike. She says Sunday school don't do me no good.—Philadelphia Press.
